Owned by the Norwegian Broadcasting Corporation, it is used by the corporation's cable television and terrestrial television service. History TV2 Lørdag started broadcasting on October 9, 1999, and has been shown over the public broadcaster's digital television network since February 2000. At first, it showed sport events on TV2-kanalen before it went solo on 1 October 2004. TV2 Lørdag later became TV2 Sport, first airing several IPPs, but later started broadcasting some live TV events (mostly UEFA Champions League and EURO 2010). TV2 Sport airs some football match packages from Israeli company Sport Media Play, and this partnership became increasingly important for the channel. On May 9, 2006, TV2 Sport gained the rights for broadcast a number of matches from the Finnish Premier League, including all home matches, including the Finnish cup final. At the same time, TV2 Sport lost the rights to broadcast the Israeli matches. On May 1, 2007, the channel gained the rights to televise Kontinental Hockey League games from Russian company GOL TV, which has all the matches as a part of its deal with the Finnish, Norwegian and Swedish clubs. On November 1, 2007, TV2 Sport also broadcast UEFA Women's Cup games. On June 1, 2008, the channel broadcast the first Ligue 1 match, FC Nantes - Montpellier, followed by an agreement between TV2 Lørdag and Sport Media Play to broadcast all UEFA club-leagues. On April 1, 2009, TV2 Lørdag d41b202975

What's new in VRC PRO Americas On-road Tracks Deluxe:

The VRP PRO Deluxe is an on-road truck-based vehicular robot for explosive testing. It makes use of a traction motor and wheel drive, but only replaces the tires, shocks and speed-controller components of any other vehicle. The VRP PRO uses the 3 axis base system design from SRC Robotics GmbH's VRP. This means a primary central base moves over a secondary base that is latched onto the front wheel. By changing the position of the primary base, the vehicle is made to fit nearly any sort of obstacle, moving forward and sideways. The primary base gets locked in position using a dowel on the front axle and a motion sensor on the secondary base. Its dual axis orientation and serial output makes for a maximum of 14 degrees of freedom without having to tilt the camera, plus a 360 degree rotation in the field of view. The latched secondary base acts as a track, created from three rails. This design allows for precision movement, which the company says can be in the range of .4 to 1.0cm in small movements. They add that these are carried out using a high-precision 5 axis micro-stepping motor. Positioning accuracy is further augmented using three torque guides built into the base to hold the secondary base's throw. The design also allows for fast-forward and gradual-reverse operation. The rails are non-slip and extend to the corners of the base, with each corner having a 22 degree range of motion with roll, pitch and yaw. The stepper motors used in the wheel propulsion system are an AC servo motor with no encoder. They are divided into three sections; the servo motor itself (10Nm stall torque), the voltage-doubler and the ratio gear hub. A 10:1 ratio is used between the servo motor and the wheels. The team behind the VRP PRO cites the importance of advancing autonomous vehicles and that a new competition is fast approaching. They call this the "warehouse challenge" - a container inspection for vehicles coming from the docks. Their introduction of the new robot will also allow for the widening of the boundaries of VHRP's use cases. VRPB does admit that the tracks can sometimes get in the way of service work and that there is more that they could do with the software capabilities of what they have. They acknowledge that they could have prototyped a track system with fewer joints
